

1. “Here he beholds fair cities, substantial villages, extensive fields, an immense country filled with decent houses, good roads, orchards, meadows, and bridges, where a hundred years ago all was wild, woody, and uncultivated!”

➤ They achieved “The City Upon a Hill” and built their country from scratch.

2. “We have no princes for whom we toil, starve, and bleed. We are the most perfect society now existing in the world. Here man is free as he ought to be . . .”

➤ In Europe, they don’t choose their leader. The American society is the perfect society.

❖ Not true: their country is not universal, at that time they still had slaves.

3. “Here they are become men. In Europe they were as so many useless plants.”

➤ Useless plants: rooted. They don’t choose their path it is chosen for them.

4. “The American is a new man, who acts upon new principles. He must therefore entertain new ideas and form new opinions”

➤ They have free will to choose their believes.

5. “Then the Americans become as to religion what they are as to country $\frac{3}{4}$ allied to all.”

➤

6. “. . . thus in a few years this mixed neighborhood will exhibit a strange religious medley that will be neither pure Catholicism nor pure Calvinism.”

➤

7. “This is every person’s country; the variety of our soils, situations, climates, governments, and produce, hath something which must please everybody. No sooner does a European arrive, no matter of what condition, then his eyes are opened upon the fair prospect.”

➤ America is a country that accepts everyone no matter where he came from.

8. “What a change indeed! It is in consequence of that change that he becomes an American. This great metamorphosis has a double effect $\frac{3}{4}$ it extinguishes all his European prejudices. He forgets that mechanism of subordination, that servility of disposition which poverty had taught him”

➤ When someone comes to America, he leaves all of his old life behind and start a new one.